Assemblyman Braunstein Announces Assembly Passage of Gun Safety Legislation

Assembly pushes to create extreme risk protection orders

Assemblyman Braunstein announced that the Assembly once again passed legislation he supported to establish an “extreme risk protection order” to help keep guns out of the hands of people demonstrating a serious threat to themselves or others. These orders would help prevent gun violence, including mass shootings, domestic violence homicides and gun suicides, Assemblyman Braunstein noted. Unfortunately, despite overwhelming public support for this commonsense measure, the State Senate has refused to bring it to the floor for a vote.

The Assembly passed a version of the bill in March, but has since strengthened the legislation by adding school officials to the list of individuals who can petition for an order, recognizing that teachers and counselors are on the front lines and are often among the first people to see the warning signs that lead to school shootings.

“All too frequently, disturbed individuals use guns to take innocent lives,” said Assemblyman Braunstein. “We need to be taking real action to combat this growing problem. One of the most significant steps we can take is making sure that people who exhibit clear warning signs do not have access to guns.”

The legislation gives courts the ability to issue a restraining order, known as an “extreme risk protection order,” prohibiting a person who exhibits serious signs of being a threat to themselves or others from purchasing or possessing a firearm for up to one year. The petitioner, who could be a family member, school official or law enforcement officer, would be required to file a sworn application describing the circumstances and justification for the request. Following a hearing, the court could grant the order if there is reasonable cause to believe the individual in question is likely to engage in conduct that would result in serious harm to themselves or others. In emergency circumstances, the court could also issue a temporary order restricting access to firearms pending a final hearing.

There are frequently red flags for gun violence. The authorities were warned the Parkland shooter was amassing weapons with the intent to attack a school. In fact, research shows that 42 percent of mass shooters between 2009 and 2016 exhibited warning signs. A law in Connecticut that allows courts to remove guns from individuals who are a danger to themselves or others resulted in a nearly 14 percent reduction in firearm suicides.

“Too many lives have been lost to gun violence,” Assemblyman Braunstein said. “Thoughts and prayers will never be enough – they will not bring victims back and they will not keep guns out of the hands of dangerous individuals. This legislation is an important step toward protecting New Yorkers.”

Assemblyman Braunstein also passed these commonsense measures to prevent and reduce gun violence in New York and will keep fighting to make them law.

- ✓ Ban the possession, manufacture and sale of bump stocks
- ✓ Establish a longer waiting period to ensure more thorough background checks

Assemblyman Braunstein Opposes Elimination of SHSAT

Assemblyman Braunstein announced his opposition to legislation supported by Mayor de Blasio which would eliminate the Specialized High School Admissions Test (SHSAT).

“I strongly disagree with the Mayor’s proposal to change the admissions standards for specialized high schools, including eliminating the SHSAT,” said Assemblyman Braunstein. “A change of this magnitude to our education system should not have been introduced at the end of the legislative session without a public hearing and input from the stakeholders who would be greatly affected by this proposal. That’s why I fought along with my colleagues in the Assembly Asian Pacific American Task Force to block the passage of the proposed legislation eliminating the SHSAT.”

“While more needs to be done to increase diversity in specialized high schools, it should begin with a more robust effort to provide students in underrepresented communities with the assistance they need to gain admission,” said Assemblyman Braunstein. “The Department of Education must increase efforts to educate families about the admissions process to specialized high schools, as well as expand the availability of free or low-cost test prep classes. Additionally, the Mayor’s proposal to limit the number of seats available at specialized high schools for private school students is arbitrary and unfair to thousands of taxpayer families in New York City.”

Nearly 200 Seniors Attend Assemblyman Braunstein’s Senior Health & Wellness Forum

On June 27, 2018, Assemblyman Braunstein hosted a Senior Health and Wellness Forum at the Samuel Field Y in Little Neck.
